

My Philosophy

My piano and vocal studio focus on empowering aspiring musicians through positive reinforcement, critical thinking, building healthy technique, and emphasizing sustainable and holistic approaches to music making.

•

I have a foundation in the Montessori philosophy and aim on doing decolonization work in the classroom to help build a well-rounded and encompassing music community. I am excited to share and foster a passion for music with my students while building a mentally and emotionally healthy and solid foundation.

In my experience of being in unhealthy music institutions, I do not tolerate abuse of power and I try to actively dismantle the white supremacy that is prevalent in western music institutions. I believe in creating a safe space in order to make music accessible, nurturing, and supportive. I highly believe in collaborating with my students to reach their goals.

•

I accept students regardless of race, gender, age, disability, and socio-economical background. In order to make my lessons accessible, I offer rates on a sliding scale to BIPOC, queer, and low-income students who wish to pursue their passion!
